

Testimony in Support of H.B 5208, AN ACT CONCERNING HOUSING OPPORTUNITIES FOR JUSTICE IMPACTED PERSONS

Dear Chairs Williams and Lopes, Vice Chairs Smith and Anwar, Ranking Members Polletta and Cicarella, and Members of the Housing Committee:

My name is Joyce Liow and I am a resident of New Haven. I'm writing to communicate my strong support for H.B 5208 - An Act Concerning Housing Opportunities for Justice Impacted Persons. This bill would make it a discriminatory practice for housing providers to not consider a prospective tenant based on a criminal conviction after certain time periods. Specifically, housing authorities would not be allowed to consider convictions of misdemeanors over 3 years before the rental application, or convictions of felony over 7 years before the rental application. It is imperative that it passes, to provide a second chance for many who have moved beyond convictions.

Currently in Connecticut, housing authorities can refuse to rent to any formerly incarcerated person, even for crimes committed many years ago. Barriers to reentry from the prison system are detrimental both to the formerly incarcerated and to the communities where those individuals come from. The lack of fair housing for formerly incarcerated people is a major roadblock for those trying to re-emerge in society, and contributes heavily to the "revolving door" of homelessness and punishment—including a state recidivism rate of 34%. Even for smaller misdemeanor charges without any conviction that happened years ago — such as conviction for conduct that occurred when the applicant was a minor — under present law, an applicant may be denied housing for that reason.

It is so important to break the cycle that funnels people in and out of the prison system. In 2018, the Prison Policy Initiative reported that people who have been incarcerated multiple times experience homelessness at rates 13 times higher than the general population. By making it more difficult for incarcerated individuals to find housing and establish a base standard of living, the re-entry process for incarcerated individuals is made all the more difficult and results in higher recidivism rates. As a result, this process of re-entry would be improved greatly by increasing the number of housing opportunities for justice-impacted individuals. Connecticut is not alone in this problem, as a study across 14 different states found that 79% of formerly incarcerated individuals were denied housing due to a past criminal conviction. When the 2020 Marshall Project asked incarcerated people across the country what could have kept them out of prison, many responded with access to affordable housing.

In conclusion, I urge you to provide a second chance at housing for those who committed crimes outside of the 3 and 7 year windows as outlined in H.B 5208. Instead of subjecting formerly incarcerated Connecticut residents to a cycle of criminalization — even for minor misdemeanors committed long ago — this state should seek to make the re-entry process as smooth as possible by mitigating the hardships that come when individuals emerge from prison. I urge you to favorably vote this bill out of the Housing Committee so that a second chance may be given to those who most need it.

Thank you for your time and consideration,

Joyce Liow
